FREE & OPEN TO THE PUBLIC
Since our last County Studio Tour in June 2019, we have been in our studios developing our ideas, nurturing our intuition, and perfecting our skills. Once again, we will emerge this September to share our creative environments and new work.

Our studios vary wildly in size, clutter, layout, and location. Some are art centers or separate buildings, while some are tiny rooms or perhaps a corner of a room. These are the places where art is born and our minds roam free. As we find our path, our materials and tools of the trade evolve around us. You will see reference books and bits of inspirational material that some might call junk. There are of course unfinished works or some that were never meant to be finished.

It is not surprising that some of our studios are more chaotic than others, but all are reflections of our art. Some studios are tidy and almost clinically clean where white palettes abound. Other studios are filled to the brim where artwork may literally get spilled out onto the floor. One thing all artists have in common is collective inspiration.

We hope you enjoy the tour as much as we do.

Jeff Schaller, Organizer & Founder
The fourth annual Montgomery County Studio Tour returns this coming September 18-19. Over the course of one weekend, artists across the county will open the doors to their studios and invite visitors inside to explore and enjoy local art. This event is free and open to the public and all artwork is for sale.

Arts Montco is again proud to partner with the Montgomery County Studio Tour, this time with an exciting opportunity. The first annual Arts Montco Week, a celebration of the arts in Montgomery County, will take place September 17-26. What better way to kick off the first weekend of Arts Montco Week than getting out to see the fantastic artists of the County Studio Tour?

We are excited that Arts Montco has partnered with us in supporting our mission of promoting local and regional artists. Artists contribute to the economic and cultural vitality of the area by presenting original artwork and sharing their studios with the public.

The County Studio Tour is anything but exclusive, whether you are an artist yourself or an admirer, this is your chance to connect with the artists and their original works. Make connections with your favorite local artists and snag yourself a brand-new piece of art while you’re at it.

My work is primarily the result of my love for art; it is both a challenge and an outlet, a discipline and a passion. I try to convey my own sense of reality or fantasy and hope to engage the viewer in sharing this pictoral illusion. I define my work as a balance between mastery of technique, an opinion to express and an emotional reaction.

The most important part of the art adventure for me is the idea of staying as true to my own visions and conceptions as possible. It is the willingness to accept the images that come to me with the most force at any given time leads to divergences in my work. I spent three decades doing figurative art, then, I transitioned to natural objects and onto mainly geometric shapes.

Modified geometric shapes are still appearing in the current iconography I am doing. Currently my work explores aspects of the interrelationship of generations. With aging I have watched and experienced the cycle of the gradual shifting of roles, from mother to child and child assuming a parental role with their parent.

These events and their resulting emotions are sometimes happy, but sometimes difficult, requiring a change in perspective. Some of the works I derived from this come under the heading of "Invisible Loom" using a descriptive designation: "Invisible Loom: Triangle." A few under the heading "Gaining Perspective." They represent the continuity as well as the beginning and the end of a thread of an existence.

I am a mixed media encaustic artist and photographer. I have an extensive knowledge of drawing, acrylic painting, pastel painting, printmaking, encaustic, collage, and mixed media two and three-dimensional work. I delight in varied textures, shapes and colors and pick up or photograph everything I find that inspires me. All this natural and cultural detritus ultimately finds its way into my art.

Although my art is characterized by color and composition, these natural and cultural themes give my art a personal mooring. I enjoy researching a topic, understanding all its nuances and details, and then, producing a body of work based on that knowledge that I can pass on to others viewing my work. In my art I start with color, focus on composition and finish with unexpected details.

I was introduced to painting at age sixteen months, when my artist educator mother put me into a bathtub, surrounded by sheets of newsprint taped to the walls, with tempera paint in baby food jars, each with its own brush, sitting on the edge of the tub.

She told me that this is where I should create pictures, rather than drawing crayon images on the newly wallpapered walls of our home. Soon thereafter, I started talking and telling stories about my paintings, which led to the development of writing skills. Painting, therefore, was my original creative method of communication and visual storytelling.

Today, I write stories to accompany my paintings and photographs, but rather than taping them to the walls around the tub, magazines such as International Living publish them.

Meet the Artist

My Pennsylvania paintings depict the rural community and a way of life that is quickly fading into the past. Many of the timber and stone barns and mills, the houses and outbuildings, which are part of the Pennsylvania heritage, are rapidly disappearing. I’d like to feel, in a way, that I have preserved them in my paintings.

In Maine, I paint the rugged shoreline of the mid-coast region and Monhegan Island where I enjoy the smell of salt air and the feeling of sea spray. I’ve always loved the sea, probably a combination of things—the boats, the energy of the surf, the rocks, the storms and the romance of it all. I hope this comes across in my paintings of the weathered clapboard lobster shanties and the granite towers of the lighthouses.

Sculptor Karen Kieser’s Immersion Studio offers organic-themed mixed media sculptures that draw reference from the elements of the natural world. She specializes in the installation of unique artworks that respond to specific locations (home or corporate). Kieser makes forms that create a human connection to the space. Her work describes the vibrancy of growth and the use of nature to hint at human behavior. The sculptures are often made of sheet copper, pipe, and wire, but other materials are also incorporated. The artwork ranges from the intimate to the grand in scale. Her techniques include welding, plasma cutting, and chemical patina.
Katharine is a contemporary artist and instructor. She maintains a studio in Montgomery County, PA, as well as a summer studio on Monhegan Island, ME, where she gathers subjects from the fields, farms and historic buildings found nearby to create still life and landscape paintings. These days, her primary medium is oil but she is accomplished in watercolor and drawing. She is honored to have been accepted into regional as well as national open juried shows. Her work can be found in collections throughout the United States.
If you want to learn to paint or draw, desire is at least as important as talent. If you’ve always wanted to create art, a good instructor is key.

I offer private and semi-private lessons in nature-inspired realism to adults and teens in my studio or via Zoom.

Whether you’re a beginner or you’ve been painting for a while, I can help you improve your skills and love every minute of it.

After receiving my BFA from Tyler School of Art, I continued to explore art in many different ways and through different mediums, experimenting with printmaking, photography, textile and mural arts. It wasn’t until after my son was born that I discovered my true passion for oil painting. I mostly paint still life and figures. Most recently, I have been painting fish. I love their graceful movement, vivid color and simple beauty. I love the way light hits the body of a fish and creates a luminous glow, one that I am continually striving to capture on canvas. The vessels that contain them provide endless inspiration as well. The prisms of color reflected on the rim of a bowl or the surface of the water present an exciting challenge to capture with paint.

For me, fish represent so many things—harmony, tranquility, and peacefulness, as well as feelings of loneliness and isolation.

Only a three minute drive from downtown Ambler, this studio tour includes gardens, a goldfish pond, and an out building, transformed many times over the years, first as the original Lower Gwynedd post office, a horse stable, and now a gallery that is home to Heidig’s oil and acrylic paintings and monotype prints.

Pandemic Design Studio is located just outside of Philadelphia and was started three years ago by former architect, David Rozek. In 2016, David enrolled in a ceramics class at a local art center for fun which quickly turned into creating a better solution to available vertical container gardening systems. Since then, David has developed and holds patents on both his wall planter and vase collections that are commercially available and all produced at Pandemic Design Studio by himself.

David draws his inspiration from specific conditions of architecture that exist in the natural environment which he extracts the essence of and then infuses his own abstraction to create a form that will achieve his larger and modular design vision.
